ABOUT ME

Passionate about evidence-based policy and global development, I translate academic research into policy recommendations and collaborate effectively to create solutions for complex development challenges. With a PhD in Economics and hands-on project management experience, I specialize in applying quantitative methods to address inequalities in child development. My proactive strategy led to the successful planning and implementation of a large parenting intervention and its impact evaluation. Committed to effective communication, I foster collaborative relationships between international teams and implementation partners and mentor students. Combining adaptive, empathic, and clear communication with critical thinking and problem-solving skills, I guide interdisciplinary teams through challenging project phases and enhance client engagement.
